

Kiwi Company TracMap & India's EasySecured Scoop APAC Titles at Global Security Challenge's Regional Finals

- The two APAC winners will compete with international security start-ups and SMEs for prize funds totalling US$500,000 in London later this year

SYDNEY – August 25, 2011 – Security 2011 Exhibition (August 24 – 26, Sydney Convention & Exhibition Centre), organised by Diversified Exhibitions Australia, today announced the APAC winners for the 6th Global Security Challenge. New Zealand GPS guidance company TracMap secured the APAC Small and Medium Enterprise (SME) Award, and Indian two-factor authentication provider EasySecured Software & Services won in the start-up category.

TracMap, based in New Zealand's South Island, is the largest provider of GPS technology to the agricultural sector in New Zealand, and recently won the NZ Hi-Tech Emerging Company Award. TracMap explained how its GPS tracking services can be successfully deployed by emergency services, defence and law enforcement. By equipping helicopters with TracMap's unit, aerial rescue teams can reduce time and cost of aerial searches by 30 per cent.

EasySecured Software & Services, from Mumbai, India, showcased an innovative new two-factor authentication technology that turns any mobile device into a security token without storing data on the device itself. EasySecured sees possible applications for its solution in the protection of e-health records, financial data, and personal information on the Internet as well as enterprise cloud services.

A high profile panel comprised of some of the most renowned security and start-up experts from the US and Australia judged the live presentations held at Security 2011 Exhibition today:

- Todd Brethauer, science advisor at TSWG (Technical Support Working Group), a interagency of the US Department of Defense
- Steven Scanlan from The Australian Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet National Security Science and Technology (NSST) Branch
- Graham Ingram, managing director of the University of Queensland cyber security unit, AusCERT
- Brad Howarth, start-up expert, freelance journalist and author
- Chris Cabbage, executive editor of Australian Security Magazine and director of MySecurity Media
- Kim Mettam, director of business at iWebgate, 2010 winner of the Global Security Challenge's SME Award, worth US$300,000

iWebGate's Mettam welcomed the six APAC finalists and highlighted how the Global Security Challenge can help security start ups rise above the noise.

TracMap and EasySecured Software & Services will be competing with regional titleholders from the UK, Europe, US East and West Coast and the Middle East at the Global Security Challenge global finals, will take place as part of PitchLive, to be held in London, UK from October 24 – 25, 2011.

About Global Security Challenge

Supported by US Department of Defense agency, the Technical Support Working Group (TSWG), BAE Systems plc and Nauta Capital, the Global Security Challenge looks for new technologies and innovations that address public security needs. The competition features two categories, one for startups, which is open to embryonic companies, concept projects or university research projects, and one for SMEs (small and medium enterprises) with annual revenue and investments under US$15million. The GSC is completely free to enter and makes no demands on IP or company ownership.

The brainchild of OmniCompete, Global Security Challenge was conceived at London Business School in 2005, where the founders met during their MBAs. GSC top contenders from previous competitions have subsequently generated over US$100 million in investment and acquisitions.
